Annotations

*1 The Village of Shipley

The village was established in the 1850s to house and feed the workforce building the nearby Thorndon Park Reservoir, which was South Australia's first reservoir and the largest infrastructure project of its day. The Shipley Congregational (later Independent) Chapel was built in 1853 and was opened for worship on 18 June 1854.

However, once the Thorndon Park Reservoir was completed in 1860, the distance from town and the small population proved to be insurmountable obstacles. By 1913 the Chapel was deserted, described as a "nesting place for birds" in one contemporary newspaper account. The final service was held in 1926, and the abandoned Chapel was demolished, but the cemetery remains in use as a burial place for people of all denominations.

*2 Athelstone Independent Cemetery.

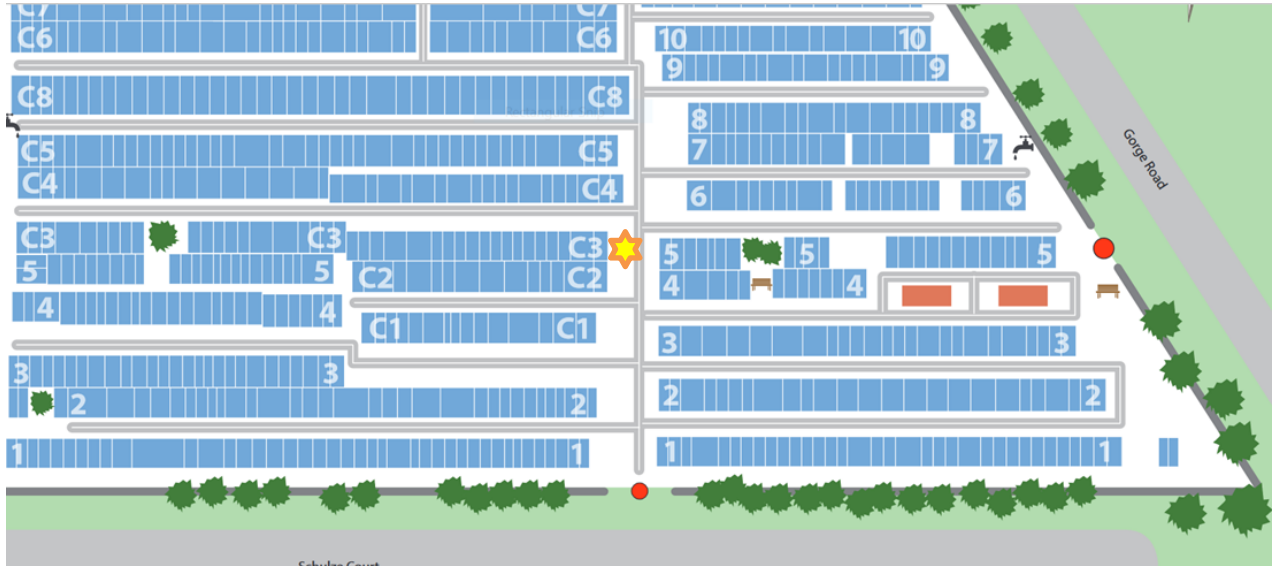

At this time there are no available burial sites available for purchase at Athelstone Independent Cemetery. However, there are memorial positions for ashes available on the Columbarium Wall. The term of internment rights for both burials and positions on the Columbarium Walls is forty years. Campbelltown City Council took over management of the cemetery in June 1966.

Some of those buried here include:

- Giovanni 'John' AMADIO (d. 1983) born in Castignaono, Italy, market gardener in 'East Marden', Campbelltown, and founder of Amadio Wines. Row 9 South Site 1 A
- Henry and Annie HERSEY (d. 1893 & 1906) market gardeners, sauce-maker, carpenter, and noted diarist of early Athelstone. Row 1
- Géza LAKATOS (d. 1967) the last constitutional Prime Minister of the Royal Kingdom of Hungary, having briefly overthrown Nazi occupation in 1944. Row C3 Site 1
- James MARCHANT (d. 1868) established a Bakehouse in 1854 on the corner of Russell and Gorge roads, later the Marchant General Store, which operated as a family owned business for 102 years. Campbelltown City Council renamed The Marchant

Community Centre (a home of Campbelltown U3A) recognising that for more than 100 years the Marchant family operated the store opposite the Community Centre and the area there was known as Marchant's Corner. Mr James Marchant constructed the store in that location in 1854 and it remained in the ownership and operation of the family until at least the late 1960s. ECH also named their retirement community as Marchant Court R2

- Annie OLDLAND (d. 1932), Emily STARR (d. 1898), and Elsie KERNEY (d. 1901) wife and daughters of John Kerney (d. 1892), infamous as South Australia's Captain Thunderbolt. R1

3 Incredible life of Geza Lakatos

Geza was born in Budapest in 1890 and graduated as a second lieutenant from the Ludovika Military Academy in Budapest and that is when the normality of his life ends....

- After graduation as a 20 year old man he served as an infantry officer, for the Austro-Hungarian Army, throughout its Empire.
- At 24 he was accepted into the War Academy in Vienna. His studies were interrupted by WW1, and he was sent to the Russian front as a staff officer to a Brigadier.

- At 27 he was transferred to the Italian front. At the end of the war, the allies split up the Austro-Hungarian Empire, and relocated its European boundaries. Overnight Hungary lost 2/3rds of its land mass and 1/3rd of its Hungarian speaking population. The army was disbanded. It was during this time that a Bolshevik-Communist Revolution took control of the country and the Hungarian Soviet Republic was formed. It lasted for 133 days
- During this time Geza Lakatos was in charge of the military headquarters in Gődöllő. Politically he joined the Nationalists. Anti-communist politicians decided to form a new Government after the failed communist coup. They were forming a military force known as the National Army, when the Romanian army invaded Budapest.
- The brief period of communist rule was known as the “Red Terror”, due to the extreme violence used. When they were overthrown the period was known as the “White Terror” when the violence was reversed.
- After WW1 the allies would not allow the Austro-Hungarian monarch to return. The new Nationalist Government elected Admiral Horthy, a national hero, as the new Regent. The attempted revolution had a marked effect on the new and successive Governments. They feared Russia.
- At 35 Geza Lakatos was made military attaché to Prague. He was also given the title of Vitez. (valiant or gallant soldier).
- In 1939 he was made a three star General. He was 49
- At 53 he was the Chief of Defence Staff out of Kiev, and made a four star General in that year (1943). Again because of the fear of Russia, Hungary aligned with Germany and fought against Russia.
- Germany installed a pro-Nazi Government in Budapest to carry out its instructions and protect its self. When the Nazi-aligned members of Government began to deport large numbers of the Jewish population Admiral Horthy intervened. Having been told they were being sent to labour camps as slave labour, the truth began to filter back that they were being exterminated.
- With one tank Geza Lakatos overthrew Döme Sztójay and those others sympathetic to Germany.
- Geza Lakatos then formed, and headed, as Prime Minister, a Government not aligned to the Nazis. The deportations were ordered to stop, and the law enforcers were advised to use deadly force to end them.
- The Government was now in a precarious position. The Russian army was almost on their doorstep, and the Nazis were incensed at the loss of an aligned partner in Hungary. Geza Lakatos began negotiations with the enemies of Germany, assuring them Hungary would surrender. He even tried to negotiate with Russia.
- He was the last constitutional Prime Minister in Hungary. He was replaced with a Nazi puppet, who in turn, was replaced by a Russian puppet.
- When it became clear to Germany that Admiral Horthy was no longer a supporter, they captured his son and held him prisoner. Admiral Horthy was advised to undo his armistice with Russia or his son would be executed. Admiral Horthy had already lost a son in a flying accident during the war. He did as requested and Hitler’s answer was to invade and occupy Hungary.

- All Hungary's anti-Nazi politicians were arrested and imprisoned. On January 2nd 1945 Geza Lakatos was imprisoned by the Germans.
- He was released at the end of the war, only to be re-arrested and imprisoned by the Russians.
- In 1946 he was again released from prison.
- In 1949 the then Hungarian Government cancelled his pension (he was 59yo) and confiscated his property. To earn an income he returned to Budapest and began to illustrate books and hand paint silk scarves.
- In 1957 his daughter immigrated to Adelaide.
- In 1965 at the age of 75 he arrived in Adelaide to be with his daughter.
- In 1967 on the 24th of May he died in Adelaide. He was buried at the Athelstone Independent cemetery, in Schulze Court.
- His memoir was posthumously published in 1981. Titled "As I Saw It. The tragedy of Hungary" It was released in West Germany and in the U.S.A. After the collapse of communism in 1992 it was released in Hungary.

4 The Fifth Creek Trail stretches between Maryvale Road to its junction with the Torrens River in Athelstone which is a suburb within the city of Campbelltown. It has 6km of walkways (4.7km creek length)

*5 Campbelltown Community Orchard and Pump House

The Community Orchard has up to 37 fruit and nut trees and also houses the Thorndon Park Reservoir pump house which has been decorated with a mural. The mural reflects on the past and celebrating the future of food production in Campbelltown, painted by artist Melanie Spurling

Pump House

Thorndon Park Reservoir is Adelaide's oldest reservoir, established in 1860 to supply water to the City. The pump house is built into the wall of the reservoir and connects to the tower within the reservoir via an underground tunnel. It is connected to a pipeline running down to its sister building in the Adelaide Parklands.

The mural

- The north-facing wall is where the story of the Thorndon Park Campbelltown Community Orchard mural begins. Spilling out from an iron gate is a collage of sepia-toned photographs depicting the history of market gardens in the area, an abstracted Torrens River feeding into the Thorndon Park Reservoir and the silhouette of the Mt Lofty Ranges with a pattern of orchard produce.
- Running across the top of the walls are abstract illustrations depicting the story of cultivation (seed growth given life through water) and large details of fruiting branches showing some of the current species growing in the Community Orchard. This is set on a green background depicting a close-up detail of celery; one of the major market garden crops previously grown in the area. This section was painted as part of a Community open day where visitors were invited to paint the cross-sections of fruit and leaves using stencils as well as leaves picked from the orchard trees.
- The bars that exist on the building are transformed to appear like an open gate, removing the barrier from the image and becoming the starting point of the story for this mural spilling out from the open gate. This iron fence and gate does not replicate any particular design or fence, but is created from the artist's memory of Campbelltown in the not-too-distant past where many houses, in yellow brick with iron fencing and details.
- The Cultivation Story Illustration is an abstract stylisation illustration created in the metamorphic style that runs from left to right across the mural. The Irrigation Flower drawing in from its surrounding to create life, giving rain from its watering top bloom.

This water brings life to the series of three seeds in a sequential order of germination.

- The door of the pump house has been painted to represent the Reservoir Tower on the other side of Thorndon Park. This involved the artist painting the brick on one side of the door to look old and painted and a metal plate on the other side of the door to also look like old bricks.

6 History of Thorndon Park Reservoir

The Thorndon Park Reservoir, constructed from 1857 to 1860, was the first reservoir built in South Australia to supply Adelaide with piped water.

When the European settlers arrived in 1836, they used the River Torrens as their water supply but the river was used for many other purposes besides drinking water so the quality deteriorated. Disease spread quickly and dysentery was rife. There were soon calls for a more reliable supply that could be piped to homes and businesses. A site for a reservoir in the Athelstone area was eventually chosen. Land for the reservoir site was obtained from a Lord Petre. Petre's property in the Athelstone area was named Thorndon Park after his baronial property in Essex, England and this name was used for the reservoir.

The plan was to build a weir on the Torrens above the reservoir site and divert water to the reservoir by gravity feed. Water from the reservoir was to be piped again by gravity feed to a valve-house on the corner of North Terrace and Hackney Road. From this point the water could be distributed to North and South Adelaide. Work commenced on the weir on the Torrens but it was not a success. It was left ruined and cost approximately £5000 to £6000. A second site further upstream was chosen and a weir successfully built to divert the water to the reservoir.

In June 1860 water began flowing from the weir to the reservoir and the first water from Thorndon Park Reservoir began flowing from the Kent Town Valve House in 1862

When full the reservoir held 142,000,000 gallons (645,545 kilolitres.)

Thorndon Park Reservoir continued to be used until 1977 when fears about the structural safety of the reservoir wall breaching and threatening encroaching suburbia caused the reservoir to be decommissioned.
